Your health risk

The primary health risk from long-term exposure to radon is lung cancer. The risk of developing a lung cancer from radon exposure depends both on how much radon is present and length of exposure. The higher the radon level or the longer the exposure, even if levels are relatively low, the greater the risk. Exposures up to 4 pCi/L in indoor air may present some risk of contracting lung cancer to more sensitive occupants, especially children. The risk of waterborne radon is the eventual release of radon from the water into the indoor air. Radon is released from water most readily when the water is heated and agitated: i.e., showering, washing dishes, laundry, etc. The US EPA uses a conversion factor of 10,000:1 to calculate the indoor air risk from waterborne radon. This means that 10,000 picocuries per liter in water is thought to produce about 1 picocurie per liter in air.
